

SPECIFIC REGULATIONS FOR BOXING

0. BRIEF BOXING HISTORY

INTRODUCTION TO C.I.S.M. BOXING CHAMPIONSHIP

It's believed that Boxing was introduced by Theseus, son of Egeus, King of Athens, in 776 BC. The Greeks initiated the Romans in this sport which supposedly, was part of the legionnaires training. In turn, Caesar's soldiers introduced it to France and Britain. This sport was practiced in the form of Pugilism. The participants fought with their fists without hand to hand fighting and with their hands covered by a strip of leather, about 1.50m long. It covered the wrists, as well as the palm of the hand and ended in a cylindrical ring of three or four layers of leather. This ring covered the four knuckles leaving the thumb free. The fight continued until one of the adversaries was knocked down, but didn't end until he gave up by raising his hand.

Boxing disappeared at the end of the fourth century AD when gladiators and mortal sports were banished.

Contemporary Boxing started in 1719 in England under the impulse of British Champion James Figg. Titled The Father of the "Noble Art" because of his strength and technique.

At that time, practically all boxers were heavy. The fights were conducted with bare fists and the time of the fight wasn't limited by other than the knocking down of one of the boxers, a 30 second count was given to allow him to return to the ring, otherwise he would be declared beaten. The fight was often bloody.

In 1742, a Boxing Academy was created in England, and the first rules of the sport were created. Nevertheless, boxing remained a brutal, bare fisted massacre until 1899.

As a result, boxers fought with thin gloves and afterwards, with 5 ounce gloves. At this time the Marquis of Queensberry published the rules that humanised and legalised boxing giving it the name of "Noble Art".

When the practice of boxing was extended to various countries and bigger international participation at the matches occurred, the number of champions adulated by the crowd multiplied and, this sport was made popular by a great number of ring artists.

For the International Council for Military Sports, boxing was one of the first sports to be included in the schedule of sports competitions. The First International Military Boxing Championship was organised by the United States in 1947, in Berlin. For the following years, boxing became one of the most important sports events in the C.I.S.M. schedule.
